“ My beloved Pap was the greatest grandfather. He was also one of my favorite people. We shared dimples and stubbornness, many meals, and recently, beers. He filled my childhood with waterslides and tree-climbing, dollar store sprees and Mickey Dees. My grandparents' home was a safe place brimming with child-like joy. We danced and played games, watched movies and built forts. In later years, I lived with him as an adult - for a few months after my brother died and again after studying abroad. Every hour spent together has bloomed thrice its beauty now. Bouquets line my heart because of you, Pappy. I would give anything to walk down the stairs in the morning and be greeted by you, drinking your coffee and reading the paper, "Morning, Nik!" Every expressed worry about my car, every exasperating monologue about how to get somewhere in northern Virginia, every voicemail and every hug... I miss all of it, because I miss you. To my dear, dependable, sharp-witted, generous grandfather - I'll forever love you more than words could possibly say.
