THE JOHN KING I KNEW.

John King was a modest man, never one to brag. He was a very religious man but never wore it on his sleeve. John never needed to tell you that he was a good Christian. You just knew by the way he treated other people. When I think of John, one quality stands out--- he was a good man.

What I remember fondly about John is his love for baseball. When he played softball on the DLA-S teams, back in the 70's, John was such a terrific power hitter that we nicknamed him "Home Run" King. Also, whenever we went to see a baseball game, he always was actively involved by scoring the game. Over the years, he and I engaged in a little game of trying to stump the other one on some baseball trivia and in the many years that we played this game, I only stumped him once.

John had a quiet strength about him---whether it was playing softball or working, he was never rattled and he never lost his composure or got angry at himself or other people. He was just a nice guy that other people liked being around.

I will miss having a friend who shared my passion for baseball. I will miss going to baseball games and going to lunch with him. But most of all I will miss my friend John.
