“ Like others, we knew each other through an online gaming community. A chat log between us, around the time he got promoted to rank (Senior Member? Moderator? Senior Moderator?). This was about the time MSN Messenger was the primary means of communication. He gave this to me at the recent closure of the forums, and it meant a lot to me even if it was just a couple of words between friends long ago. I was amazed that he still had the chat logs from a decade ago.

“ Josh and I met at work. He was my seat partner and one of my first friends when I finished training and started on the floor. He was very kind and always offered to assist even though we were both new and did not know much.

Josh was witty and always hard working and he had nice compassionate behavior. I will never forget one of our first encounters when I had a very difficult member on the phone, right after the conversation, Josh popped his head up with a sly smile and said "you want some star burst? it will make you feel better," before I could even respond, he placed 2 star burst on the demarcation between our desks and continued his work.

A lot of people at work talk so much about his love for star bursts and think it is about the candy, but I saw that as his way of sharing and caring. He would go to Walmart and buy packs of starburst and other candies to share with people at work. I recall several times I offered to give him cash because he always bought the candy with his own money and he said "oh no Charles, this is my own little contribution to the communications center."

I can go on and on about the good times, about his several life advice, about when he taught me how to eat warheads candy. His funny boss like tone when I tried to spit it out and he said "you better not give up on me Charles" lol. So much to talk about and to remember. So much good that will live on in my heart and the hearts of his other coworkers.

Josh was a friend, a brother and a wonderful coworker and I will always remember him. I appreciate the friendship over the short period we knew each other (less than 2 years), and I'll always remember to cherish every moment.

Appreciating people when they are here is very important, it doesn't take away the pain when they are gone, but it sure helps. I will miss you Joshua Harrison. Rest well my friend!

“ Josh and I met in around 2003 through an online game and became really good friends. We were out of touch for a few years in between until we met up when I visited Washington DC in 2014. I was hoping to some day show him around Brisbane, Australia. I will miss FaceTiming him in the middle of his night because he always seemed to go to bed late. I will miss our occasional chats about how each others' lives were going across the ocean. I will miss you very much Joshy :(. My thoughts are with your family.
