“ I don't know your family and was sifting through the Metro section of the Washington Post and saw your son's obituary. Please accept my sincere condolences to your entire family during this most difficult time. I have two young children and greatly sympathize with your loss. Please be strong & know that God loves your family & your son is know with him in a place where there is no hurt or sorrow. The question of "WHY" will come to your lips but know that God has a purpose and doesn't make mistakes. Your son's life has been a precious blessing that will know be used in another form.

Be strong.

“ Missy, I can't say that I understand your loss because I've haven't experienced what you're going through now. However, I know what it feels to love and to loose. During these difficult times, I ask that you remember three things; faith, hope and charity. Faith that will carry you through. The hope that your tomorrow will be brighter than today. And the charity that Storms life wasn't in vain and that there are still so many wonderful memories left to cherish. Now he's an angel amongst the stars. You and Sierra are forever in my prayers.
